Preface

This report on “Plans for the 2012 BRICS Summit” draws from public sources to aid researchers and other stakeholders interested in the BRICS summit. It thus focuses on the political and diplomatic aspects of the BRICS as a plurilateral summit institution, and includes material on the physical summit, India’s preparations for the Delhi Summit and other BRICS-related meetings. It is updated periodically as information becomes available.

Introduction: India 2012 BRICS Summit

India will host the fourth BRICS summit in New Delhi on March 29, 2012. The summit will cover issues including, trade, the global economy, agriculture, health and innovation, international terrorism, climate change, food and energy security. However, other issues will be identified as India develops the agenda.

The first summit was held in 2009 in Russia, with the leaders from Brazil, Russia, India and China (BRIC). The same four leaders met for the second summit in Brazil in 2010. In 2011, with China as the host, South Africa attended for the first time. In 2012 India will host the fourth summit with the leaders of all five BRICS countries.

The Delhi Summit will be the first major diplomatic event India will host in 2012.

Agenda

Priority Themes

The agenda of BRICS meetings has widened over the years and will continue to include diverse and pertinent global issues such as international terrorism, WMDs, climate change, food and energy security, MDGs, international economic and financial situation etc.¹ (February 14, 2012)

An overarching priority for the Indian hosted BRICS summit is to strengthen “the multi-cooperation between members and consolidate their position in the world.” In light of the European crisis the BRICS leaders have highlighted the growing role of the group in strengthening the world economy. Indian official Sudhir Vyas said the “agenda of BRICS was not to project itself as an opposition bloc but to see if it can contribute in reducing both social and economic crisis in the global arena.” Carlos Duarte, Brazil’s ambassador to India, said he wanted the agenda of the summit to include issues such as urbanization, housing, global terrorism and sustainable development. Deng Xijun, deputy head of mission in the Chinese Embassy, emphasized the maintenance of common security, saying that the BRICS’s primary priority should be to “maintain peace and safety among the countries.”² (January 31, 2012, Press Trust of India)

International attention on the BRICS countries has increased incrementally over the last decade. Recognizing this, Indian prime minister Manmohan Singh has stressed that with the relevance of the BRICS to the international order the summit agenda has gone far beyond purely economic issues to include international terrorism, climate change and food and energy security. Singh has outlined that the BRICS countries share similar positions on many issues including reform of the Bretton Woods institutions, trade protectionism and the Doha Development Round, achievement of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), and support for a multi-polar, equitable and democratic world order. The prime minister stressed that against the backdrop of these global challenges, it is “all the more essential for BRICS countries to closely consult with each other at this time.”³ (December 15, 2011, Indo-Asian News Service)

European Financial Crisis

The European Union and China are holding their 14th summit in the Chinese capital to discuss economics (particularly China’s possible role in aiding the EU in the financial crisis), politics and international issues.⁴ (February 13, 2012, Deutsche Welle)

Brazilian foreign minister Antonio Patriota said that his government is ready to contribute more money to the International Monetary Fund (IMF) to alleviate the euro crisis on the condition that “the Europeans find methods and policies that do not only look at the fiscal side of things but also create conditions for a resumption of growth.” According to Patriota, the BRICS countries have begun tackling the global economic challenges posed by the euro crisis through their economic growth. He also added that the BRICS countries should commit to helping end the crisis using their foreign currency reserves, but only if the eurozone first takes comprehensive steps to end the crisis.⁵ (January 27, 2012, Dow Jones)

Global Economic Situation

In a statement issued on 16th February, Liu Weimin from the Chinese foreign ministry said, “China hopes that the next president of the World Bank will be selected based on the principle of merit in an open and fair competition.”⁶ (February 16, 2012, Financial Times)

Brazil’s finance minister Guido Mantega said, “There is no reason that the president of the World Bank is a specific nationality. It should just be someone competent and capable.”⁷ (February 15, 2012, Agence France Presse)

India’s Department of Economic Affairs in the Ministry of Finance is coordinating a Joint BRICS study on the state of world economy for the next two years and the role of BRICS countries in it. Efforts are being made to release the study at the Delhi Summit on 29 March.⁸ (February 14, 2012)

While specifying some of the details of the Delhi Summit agenda, Sudhir Vyas, Indian secretary of economic affairs in the Ministry of External Affairs, said that discussions will focus on macroeconomics as well as the BRICS’s role in improving the global financial situation.⁹ (January 31, 2012, New Kerala)

An economic research group consisting of economic think tanks from the BRICS countries will meet to discuss issues that may affect BRICS countries and the developing world.¹⁰ (January 31, 2012, Press Trust of India)

The Reserve Bank of India has cut the amount of reserve deposits usually set aside by lenders. India has thus joined the BRICS initiative of shielding growth whilst also cutting borrowing costs, already implemented by Brazil, China and Russia. This action is in response to the increasing debt crisis in Europe that is deterring global economic expansion.¹¹ (January 25, 2012, Bloomberg)

Trade

The BRICS trade ministers have planned to meet ahead of the Delhi Summit to discuss food security and agricultural productivity. They will also look at initiatives to promote business and investment amongst and beyond the BRICS countries, along with public health and the sharing of science and technology.¹² (February 2, 2012, The Hindu)

Trade between India and China hit a record $73.9 billion in 2011. Despite the growth, the trade continues to be unequal, as seen in the deficit in Beijing's favour rising to over $27 billion. S. Jaishankar, India's ambassador to China, says that efforts are being made to improve market access for Indian products in China. Chinese officials have acknowledged India's concerns and the issue has been put forth to be discussed during the BRICS trade meeting on March 28, just prior to the BRICS summit.¹³ (January 30, 2012, The Statesman)

Other

Sonesh Jain, a student at the Indian Institute of technology at Roorkee, won the logo design competition organized by the Ministry of External Affairs.¹⁴ (February 11, 2012, India Blooms News Service)

Sudhir Vyas, secretary of economic affairs in the Ministry of External Affairs, has suggested that an academic forum come together during the Delhi Summit, where think tanks and experts from all five countries would discuss various subjects of interest for the developing world.¹⁵ (January 31, 2012, Press Trust of India)

The Indian Ministry of External Affairs has created a contest to have a 2012 BRICS summit logo designed. The logo should bring out the essence of the group of countries. The competition kicks off the preparations for the summit and the deadline is January 7, 2012.¹⁶ (December 23, 2011, Economic Times)

Bilateral Meetings

Singh is expected to hold bilateral meetings with each of the leaders from China, Brazil, Russia and South Africa on the margins of the summit.¹⁷ (December 23, 2011, Daily News and Analysis)

India and Russia

Russian president Dmitry Medvedev hosted Manmohan Singh for the 12th annual India-Russia Summit, which coincided with Russia's accession to the World Trade Organization (WTO). Before departing for the three-day summit, Singh announced that he was looking forward to in-depth discussions with Medvedev on trade, Russia's leadership in the global economic crisis, and political developments in West Asia, the Gulf and Afghanistan areas and their impact on peace and stability in the world. Singh said he was convinced that India-Russia consultations on global issues were more necessary than ever before.¹⁸ (December 15, 2011, United News of India) The leaders will pay special attention to the trade and investment dimension of India-Russia ties. The two countries have fixed a trade turnover target of $20 billion by 2015.¹⁹ (December 15, 2011, Indo-Asian News Service)

The bilateral conversation will also address how to make advances in international forums such as United Nations Security Council (UNSC), Group of 20 (G20), and the BRICS and East Asia Summit.²⁰ (December 15, 2011, United News of India)

The Russian Ministry of Economic Development, and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) organized a seminar on “Preparing for the BRICS Summit in 2012: Key Themes for Russia” to discuss Russia’s engagement within the BRICS partnership. The topics included sustainable development and innovation policy cooperation. The event was opened by Andrey Slepnev, Russia’s deputy economy minister, and Haoliang Xu, UNDP deputy regional director, and was attended by Russian experts and representatives from ministries and all of the BRICS embassies. The outcomes from the seminar will be used for the BRICS senior officials meetings and other intergovernmental mechanisms to identify the projects and proposals that BRICS countries will fund.²¹ (December 27, 2011, UNDP)

India and Brazil

Celso Amorim, Brazil’s defence minister, will travel to India for talks on boosting bilateral military cooperation. According to a statement delivered by the Ministry of Defence, there is an increased potential for scientific and technological cooperation between the two countries, which would be mutually beneficial, as both countries are trying to be technologically self-sufficient. Amorim is expected to discuss naval cooperation with his Indian counterparts, especially plans to build aircraft carriers and Scorpene-class submarines, whilst discussing expanding exchanged between military academies of the two countries.²² (February 2, 2012, Agence France Presse)

India and China

Wang Jiarui, head of the International Department of the Communist Party of China (CPC) Central Committee, met with S.M. Krishna, Indian minister of foreign affairs, during his visit to Beijing. They stressed the importance of strengthening communication and coordination between the two countries in regional and international affairs. They also discussed strengthening mutual development and regional prosperity and further strengthening exchanges between the two countries at central and local levels, with emphasis on exchanges between the younger generations.²³ (February 8, 2012, British Broadcasting Corporation)

Krishna also met with Zhou Yongkang, a member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the CPC. According to Zhou, India and China should strengthen political trust and “properly handle questions left over by history — such as the border issue” so that they can work together to secure peace in these areas. Krishna reiterated that India “recognizes Tibet as a part of China and will tolerate no anti-China activities on Indian Territory.” The Indo-Chinese relationship has been solidified by the agreement to designate 2012 as the “Year of India-China Friendship and Cooperation,” a step forward from the Year of Exchange in 2011.²⁴ (February 8, 2012, Xinhua News Agency)

To increase cooperation by exchanging high-level visits between the two nations, external affairs minister S.M. Krishna will visit China to discuss “climate change, the situation in Afghanistan and the role of neighbours in stabilizing the country and, above all, the western squeeze on Iran, which is a substantial supplier of crude to both India and China” with his Chinese counterpart, Yang Jiechi.²⁵ (February 3, 2012, The Hindu)
